THE SUPREME COURT of OHIO
LAW LIBRARY
Information Series

Congress established the Federal Depository Library Program (FDLP) in the mid-1800s to provide free public access to federal government publications. Administered by the Government Printing Office (GPO), the FDLP collects, organizes, distributes and preserves information produced by the legislative, executive and judicial branches of the federal government. Published in a wide variety of formats, including print, online, microfilm, microfiche, DVD and CD-ROM, government documents include information on a broad range of subjects, such as:

Agriculture	Military History
Business & Economics	Patents & Trademarks
Crime	Population
Energy	Science & Technology
Foreign Relations	Taxation
Health	Transportation
Immigration	Weather
Labor

GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS

The Supreme Court of Ohio Law Library has been a federal government depository since 1973. It is a selective depository, which means it does not receive all of the resources published by the federal government. The library receives about 12 percent of the federal government publications distributed each month.

Scope of the Collection

The documents collection is tailored to the specific information needs of the library's legal community. It contains materials from each branch of the federal government, including:

- Agency rules and regulations
- Codes and statutes
- Judicial court decisions
- Legislative materials
- Periodicals
- Reports
- Statistics
- Treaties and other international agreements.

SuDoc Classification System

The Superintendent of Documents (SuDoc) classification scheme is an alphanumeric system designed to group publications by the same government author. The SuDoc number is composed of two parts: the stem, which designates the issuing agency and type of publication, and the book number, which identifies each document as a unique publication.

The majority of the government-documents collection is shelved on the 12th Floor in SuDoc number order.

Title: United States Reports
SuDoc: JU 6.8:536
Stem: JU = Judiciary
6.8 = Supreme Court decisions
Book number: 536 = Volume 536
